Alongside "The Simpsons" and "South Park," Seth MacFarlane's "Family Guy" is widely considered one of the staples of adult animated television. Since it began in 1999, it has proven incredibly successful among late night viewers, critics, and awards organizations (the show has won eight of the 28 Primetime Emmys it's been nominated for). "Family Guy" has also placed high on many publications' lists of the greatest animated shows ever made, squeezing into the top ten in the TV Guide ranking. The appeal of a series like "Family Guy" lies in its irreverent humor and crass comedic style. It frequently satirizes everything from modern politics to well-known movies and TV shows. It does this through the weird and wonderful inhabitants of Quahog, Rhode Island, like the rational-minded, anthropomorphic dog Brian and the young son of the Griffin family, the devious evil genius Stewie. A lot of memorable characters have popped up on "Family Guy" over the years, but which one do you most resemble in terms of your personality? If you're curious about which "Family Guy" character most directly illustrates the qualities of your zodiac sign, read on. Aries are the natural risk-takers in life, motivated almost entirely by their inherent desire to come in first place. Driven by their extremely competitive nature, they throw themselves headfirst at challenges, acting impulsively and emotionally rather than rationally. It's this hot-headedness that characterizes Joe Swanson, the local police officer in Quahog, the Griffin family's next-door neighbor, and one of Peter's best friends. Joe never backs down from a challenge and is sometimes at odds with his friends over his dedication to the law (he's arrested several of them over the years). Aries are known for being thrill-seekers, deriving excitement out of situations most other people would consider too dangerous or extreme. Joe's employment as a police officer could be seen as evidence of this, but an even more apt illustration is when he regains the use of his legs and turns into an adventurous, arrogant jock who becomes frustrated when his wife and friends can't keep up with his new, active lifestyle. Another Aries trait is a tendency to fly off the handle when things don't go to plan, something that can definitely be seen with Joe. They rarely apologize for their outbursts, seldom seeing themselves as wrong when it comes to a dispute. Because of their impulsivity and hot-headed nature, Aries are usually responsible for their own suffering, something that can be seen time and time again with Joe, who loves to bore the guys with his pointless stories. Lois may be prone to selfishness and anger from time to time, but the matriarch of the Griffin family has proven herself far more level-headed, stern, and practical than her immature husband. Lois just wants things to be normal and for her family to live in quiet, domestic bliss (this is especially true in the earlier seasons of "Family Guy"). This is usually the biggest hope of a Taurus, a zodiac sign known for prioritizing stability above all else. Having a set routine and then sticking to it is what characterizes a Taurus — they're creatures of habit who crave structure and predictability. An Earth sign all the way, they're homebodies that don't do well when confronted with something outside the norm, usually displaying a stubborn desire to return to the conditions that they thrive in. Lois has all the characteristics of a Taurus: She's a big homebody who loves things a certain way and she hates when somebody disrupts the family's normal lifestyle, which she's worked so hard to cultivate. Because of this, she has a tendency to lose her cool when Peter and the kids upset the established order of things. The oldest kid in the Griffin household, high school student Chris Griffin isn't exactly the most studious character in "Family Guy," though he does sometimes display street smarts, which the other family members lack. Intuitive and able to learn quickly on their feet, Geminis ask questions and probe for answers. On the surface, Chris might appear to possess a below-average intelligence, but his constant curiosity and desire to learn more about any given subject mirrors the personality and characteristics of a Gemini. Geminis are an interesting sign due to their seemingly large amount of contradictions. Symbolized by twins, most Geminis tend to be flexible, possessing almost two personalities in one. They can be introverted and extroverted depending on their surroundings, though they are well-known for being lost in their own thoughts. These traits can be found in Chris, someone who is placidly in the background in one scene, then taking center stage and hogging the spotlight for himself in the next. There's scarcely a dull moment when Chris is featured in either a main or supporting role in an episode — something that can certainly be said about most Geminis as well. Peter sees himself as the leader of his family, but his immature antics and erratic behavior often make him a liability to the Griffin clan. Like Chris, Peter's personality is an ever-changing stream. In later seasons, he frequently appears to go out of his way to avoid spending time with his family, but will also begrudgingly admit how much his wife and children mean to him in a sporadic display of fatherly emotion. In astrology, this is a tell-tale sign of a Cancer, someone who uses a hardened exterior to hide the mushier, more emotional layer beneath the surface. A water sign, Cancers tend to flow in various directions, their personality changing from day to day as they inherit new interests and interact with new people. They are known for their extreme sensitivity, and are easily wounded when anyone offends them in some way, however small the insult might be. These characteristics can plainly be seen with Peter, someone who adopts new hobbies on an almost weekly basis and who is comically thin-skinned, taking offense whenever anyone — especially Lois — disagrees with him or challenges his view of things. Peter's marriage has had its ups and down, but at the end of the day he's a family guy, even if he very rarely shows it. Leos are bold, outgoing, confident, and extremely caring people. They mean well, and are passionate in everything they do. Possessing an acute sense of showmanship, they have flamboyant, in-your-face personalities and love being at the center of things — all qualities that can be seen in Cleveland Brown, one of Peter's best friends. Cleveland is perhaps the most level headed and rational of Peter's pals, often acting as the voice of reason within the group. That said, he's still been known to cut loose and have a good time with his buddies. Loyal and fun-loving, Cleveland illustrates all the personal qualities you'd expect in a Leo. Leos thrive in the spotlight, having a flair for dramatic presentation and always wanting to be the star of the show (this tallies with Cleveland, who leads his own spin-off series, "The Cleveland Show"). Valuing loyalty above all else, Leos have a firm sense of personal honor and hold others to that same high standard. They are trusting to a fault, feeling the deepest personal pain whenever that trust is undermined. This is a quality that is similarly rooted in Cleveland's character. He trusts his friends and is hurt when they betray his confidence — whether it's Peter accidentally shooting his son while on the Neighborhood Watch, or Quagmire sleeping with his first wife behind his back. Mort Goldman is the owner and operator of Goldman's Pharmacy in Quahog, a gawky man plagued by a variety of health problems who isn't above sharing personal information about himself or his customers with others. Mort is a businessman through and through, always seeking to make some sort of profit. He's definitely one of the most savvy characters in "Family Guy," with many of his traits seeming to align with that of a Virgo. Virgos are deep-thinkers with keen, analytical minds that are always churning out new ideas and solutions to problems. They're notoriously obsessed with cleanliness and are more likely to be hypochondriacs than most other zodiac signs. They're also famously highly-strung, stemming from their perpetually restless minds. This often makes them appear tense and somewhat stressed out. These are all things that can be said about Mort, a sensitive soul with an overwhelming need to succeed in life. For all his intelligence, Mort lacks social skills, frequently making attempts at light-hearted conversation that come across as forced, awkward, and one-sided. This is another sign of his inner Virgo coming out, as Virgos are well-known for having difficulty in expressing themselves. Mort's hopelessly poor conversational abilities make for some hilarious gags, but they're also a dead giveaway that he's a Virgo. It's hard to remember a time when Brian was the main voice of reason on "Family Guy," given how selfish and vapid the character has become in the more recent seasons. Even at his worst, though, Brian's antics pale in comparison to those of most other "Family Guy" characters (especially Peter and his friends) and he's still the most sensible Griffin. In the show's earlier seasons, Brian's often sobering view of things made him an even more responsible figure in the household than Lois. This is very much evidence of a Libra personality — someone who is frank, straightforward, and emotionally balanced, letting reason dictate their actions. Libras are figures of high intelligence, concerned primarily with maintaining stability and seeking justice. Not only does Brian concern himself with overseeing the Griffin household, he is a fierce advocate for groups that he feels are underrepresented in society. And, like most Libras, Brian's ultimate fear is being alone, something he works hard to counteract with his numerous romantic affairs that unfortunately tend to go nowhere. Libras are also terrified of monotony and routine. They want exciting, eventful lives, something that Brian hopes to one day achieve with his writing career. His literary aspirations and affinity for the arts frequently make Brian the butt of the joke, with many characters plainly seeing him as pretentious. Sadly, due to their intellect and outlook on life, Libras are often misconceived as being arrogant or vain. Scorpios have fierce, analytical minds that thrive on the advancement of knowledge. With that description in mind, nobody fits the mold of a Scorpio better than the young son of the Griffin family, Stewie. An evil genius from birth, Stewie is far and away the most intelligent character on the show, capable of building multiple versions of his time machine, teleportation machines, and devices that allow him to explore alternate universes. Scorpios are a complex sign, just like Stewie is a complex character. In the early seasons of "Family Guy," he is usually portrayed in an antagonistic role, plotting the death of his mother and showing little remorse over his heinous actions. More recently, however, Stewie has evolved into a slightly more caring and compassionate person who uses his intelligence not for destruction, but to feed his own intellectual curiosity. However, Stewie, like any Scorpio, still prioritizes being in control over all else. They hate being bossed around, and prefer to assert their authority over others rather than being told what to do. Stewie frequently acts as the leader during his adventures with Brian, and he becomes an autocratic tyrant who creates laws that only serve his own interests after becoming President of the World in the Season 6 episodes "Stewie Kills Lois" and "Lois Kills Stewie." If you're a Sagittarius then you love life and all its infinite possibilities. They are forever searching for pleasure and adventure, often chasing unattainable goals that require them to be constantly moving, indulging in everything that life throws at them (good or bad). One of Peter's closest friends, Glenn Quagmire perfectly encapsulates a Sagittarian mindset. A pilot by trade and famously promiscuous in his personal life, Quagmire hates the thought of settling down, resulting in dozens of casual and meaningless trysts with women that only temporarily satisfy his seemingly unquenchable lust. The Sagittarius is a free-spirited soul. They are spontaneous and avoid responsibilities, reflected in Quagmire's desire to always be around his friends having fun or engaging in some sort of romantic affair. They also have a tendency to take on an overly confident, charismatic persona. However, this confidence sometimes steers the Sagittarius into trouble, as they are so focused on their goals that they fail to see the repercussions of their actions — an example being Quagmire constantly pining after Lois or sleeping with Loretta, putting his friendships with Peter and Cleveland in jeopardy. In addition to their endless supply of charisma, these fire signs are also known for their intelligence, although not quite as much as the aforementioned signs. This has been comically played out on "Family Guy," with Quagmire analytically pointing out Brian's character flaws and arguably proving himself more intelligent than Brian. Capricorns are perfectionists at heart. They hold themselves to an incredibly high standard, and are disappointed when that standard isn't met. As a result, they often set themselves up for failure. It's because of this that they are frequently seen as being judgmental, rude, snobbish, or obsessed with success. These are the qualities that define Carter Pewterschmidt, the wealthy father of Lois. Looking down upon the slovenly Peter — who he views as being a poor match for his Lois — Carter is an elitist. He wants nothing more than to sit back and enjoy the immense wealth he's gained through his cutthroat business ventures. The only things Carter truly cares about are his money and his accomplishments. He doesn't appear to hold his family in very high regard, frequently ridiculing Lois, her sister Carol, Peter, and his grandchildren. It's not all bad, however. Carter is an extreme example of a Capricorn's worst and best tendencies — he's an old meanie, sure, but his competitive nature and desire to prove himself have made him a success in life. The thing about Capricorns is that they are rarely happy with what they have, always striving to obtain more. They don't derive satisfaction simply from coming in first place, but also from knowing that other people came in second and third place as well. However, this is more a reflection of them trying to prove themselves, rather than simply ridiculing the flaws of their competition. An Aquarius will stand out in a crowd whether they want to or not. With their wonderfully unusual personalities, they are often the most interesting person at a party. "Family Guy" characters don't get any more memorably strange than Adam West, the eccentric mayor of Quahog whose position as the town's leader is juxtaposed by his extremely quirky behavior. An endlessly odd person, many of Mayor West's antics are shown to be exceptionally weird even in the framework of "Family Guy." In the past, audiences have seen him trying to stab the ocean to death, roll around in toxic waste to gain superpowers, and use a crossbow that fires cats. Also, he's 95% helium and is secretly a brainwashed Russian sleeper agent. Just like Carter is an extreme example of a Capricorn, Mayor West's representation of Aquarius qualities is an exaggerated one. However remarkable their personalities are, these air signs tend to play up their most unique characteristics in order to make them stand apart from others. They hate being labeled and are always attempting to avoid classifications — their greatest fear is to be seen as boring. Cleveland once theorized that West plays a buffoon in his everyday life in order to mask his true personality, that of a dangerous sociopath. The real Adam West (who died 2017) was a Virgo, but his character in "Family Guy" is all Aquarius. The final sign of the zodiac, Pisces know who they are and what they want, but they are divided between the idyllic dream world of their imagination and the often cruel reality they find themselves in. Such a description perfectly sums up the only daughter in the Griffin family, Meg. Commonly seen as a punching bag, she is far and away the most normal member of the family — almost shockingly so. Meg's regular life is usually misconstrued by friends and family members as being boring and bland. She's frequently mocked for her personality, appearance, and low social standing in high school. Despite how poorly she's treated, Meg still generally displays emotional level-headedness, trying — and almost always failing — to climb the social ladder. That said, Meg is arguably at her happiest when she's doing her own thing and pursuing her own goals rather than trying to impress others. Meg also illustrates the best quality of a Pisces — selflessness — numerous times throughout "Family Guy." In one particularly poignant moment, she finally stands up for herself, resulting in the family lashing out at each other. Realizing she's the pin who holds the family together — with everyone bonding and putting aside their differences to mock her — Meg sacrifices her own happiness so they can resume making fun of her. Like any good Pisces, she's always willing to put the interests of others ahead of her own. Cleveland Orenthal Brown, Sr. is a fictional character voiced by Mike Henry on the animated series Family Guy, and central character in the spin-off series, The Cleveland Show.[1][2] In the first seven seasons of Family Guy, Brown is a frequently recurring character. As one of Peter Griffin's neighbors and friends, Cleveland is also one of the few recurring African American characters on the show. He was conceived during the seventh-inning stretch of a Cleveland Indians game.[3] His established profession was that of a deli owner. In the earliest seasons of Family Guy, Cleveland frequently appeared alongside his wife Loretta Brown (voiced by Alex Borstein), until their divorce was portrayed in the Family Guy season 4 episode "The Cleveland–Loretta Quagmire". The pilot episode of The Cleveland Show depicts Cleveland's farewell to the familiar characters and settings of Family Guy. The Cleveland Show establishes its setting of Stoolbend, Virginia as Cleveland's childhood home town, and introduces a new family and set of characters supporting Cleveland as lead. Personality[] Cleveland is usually depicted as exceedingly gentle, patient, and sweet, and only on rare occasions he has been known to lose his temper and resort to violence. However, Cleveland gets visibly annoyed with racist behavior. He often acts as the voice of caution when other characters hatch harebrained schemes. Cleveland's speech is slow, almost elongated. Various flashbacks give conflicting histories of his speech patterns. In the episode "Death Lives" Peter Griffin met Cleveland in the 1970s and he (Cleveland) was skinnier (and obviously younger), sporting an Afro, but still spoke in the slow manner that he is known for. Likewise, in the premiere of his spin-off, it is revealed that Cleveland talked in a slow manner when he was in high school. In the fourth season episode "Blind Ambition", an out-of-continuity flashback depicts Cleveland as a fast-talking auctioneer when a totem pole falls over onto Cleveland's head, resulting in a slower state of speech. Cleveland is also German. One of the running gags throughout the series is that Peter's shenanigans frequently destroy the front wall of Cleveland's house, revealing him in the bathtub. He then exclaims: "What the hell?! No, no, no, no, no, NO!" as the upstairs floor tilts and the tub crashes to the ground. In the pilot of his spin-off, this gag was the last straw that convinced Cleveland to leave Quahog. However, even several states away, the Griffins' antics are still seen to cause this event, such as when debris from the missile that Brian, Stewie, Dan Aykroyd and Chevy Chase destroy happens to fall right on Cleveland's new house in the episode "Spies Reminiscent of Us" (Because of the unfamiliarity of the joke to the characters of The Cleveland Show, Cleveland's neighbor Tim the Bear appeared and said "I don't get it"). In "Brian's Got a Brand New Bag", Cleveland's old, and now unoccupied house is destroyed when Peter watches the movie Road House and beats up Brian, which results in a car crashing into the house, and the empty bathtub crashes to the ground. Afterward, Peter says "Oh, that's right. Cleveland moved." In the Cleveland Show episode "Gone With the Wind", the same running gag affects his former wife Loretta Brown, and she winds up dead after breaking her neck on the ground. Cleveland's bathtub accidents have been caused by Peter's giraffe stumbling backwards into his house, the flying missile as stated above, Peter and Lois trying to move their mentally retarded horse by driving into it, missing, and driving into his house, and other accidents. Cleveland sometimes will show some sexual deviance or arousal towards attractive women. This is shown in the episode Petarded, when Peter brings 7 prostitutes into his house to get back custody of his kids and prove to child services that Cleveland is an unfit father. Cleveland responds, "Peter! You and 5 of those prostitutes get out!". He also claims to find power sexy and says that if he could date any woman other than his wife, it would be Margaret Thatcher. Development[] Family Guy creator Seth MacFarlane created a cartoon short entitled Life of Larry.[4] The short centered around a middle-aged man named Larry and his anthropomorphic dog Steve.[5] In 1999, when MacFarlane was working for Hanna-Barbara Studios, writing for shows such as Johnny Bravo, Dexter's Laboratory, and Cow and Chicken,[6] he made a sequel to Life of Larry, which Cartoon Network broadcast in 1995.[7] The short caught the eye of 20th Century Fox representatives, who asked him to create a TV series revolving around the characters.[5] MacFarlane received a US$ 50,000 budget to develop a pilot for the show, which was, as MacFarlane stated in a 2006 interview, "Template:Interp about one twentieth of what most pilots cost".[6] In three months, MacFarlane created the Griffin family and developed a pilot for the show he called Family Guy.[8] Writers named the character Cleveland Brown in reference to the similarly named football team, although his last name wasn't revealed until after Family Guy returned from cancellation in 2005. Furthering this connection, a commercial aired during Super Bowl XLV that showed many TV characters wearing NFL jerseys, with everyone in Quahog wearing New England Patriots jerseys except Cleveland, who is wearing a Cleveland Browns jersey in reference to his name.[9] Mike Henry voices both Cleveland Brown and Herbert, as well as some minor recurring characters like Bruce the performance artist and The Greased up Deaf Guy.[10] Henry met MacFarlane at the Rhode Island School of Design and kept in touch with him after they graduated.[11] A few years later, MacFarlane contacted him about being part of the show; he agreed and came on as both a writer and voice actor.[11] Henry based Cleveland's voice on one of his basketball partners in Virginia.[11] During the show's first four seasons, he was credited as a guest star, but beginning with season five's "Prick Up Your Ears" he has been credited as a main cast member.[11] During a live broadcast of "Loveline," Seth McFarlane announced that a Family Guy spin-off featuring Cleveland was currently in the works with the studio and writers.[12] The upcoming series was mentioned in the final moments of the Family Guy season 7 episode "Baby Not On Board", with Cleveland telling Quagmire "Did I tell you I'm getting a spin-off". It premiered on September 27, 2009 on FOX, right after The Simpsons. The Cleveland Show is an animated series focusing on the character of Cleveland Brown and his family as Cleveland moves from Rhode Island to Virginia.[13] His newly introduced family includes his high school sweetheart, Donna, who is now his second wife, her 15-year-old daughter, Roberta, and her 5-year-old son, Rallo. Cleveland Jr. also is in the family but is now much fatter than he appeared on Family Guy, and also suffers from astigmatism.[1][14][15][16] Cleveland's neighbors also include a family of talking anthropomorphic bears, a redneck couple and a Victorian-era British family, and one of his son's soccer rivals includes a boy voiced by Kanye West.[13] Cleveland was officially written out of Family Guy during season eight before The Cleveland Show was broadcast; however, it has been hinted that he might come back for a visit in the future,[17][18] including the episode "Something, Something, Something, Dark Side", although fantasies and film parodies are generally accepted as non-canon Family Guy episodes. He appeared in a cameo in "Spies Reminiscent of Us", in which he dealt with the indignity of having his new house wrecked in the same fashion as his old one in Quahog, as well as appearing in the season 8 episode "The Splendid Source", where he joins the gang on a road trip to find the source of a dirty joke Chris Griffin told at school. Another idea has been that Peter Griffin and possibly other Family Guy characters will be traveling in the South and make a guest appearance on The Cleveland Show.[19] Controversy[] Some have criticised the fact that Mike Henry, who is white, is the voice actor for Cleveland Brown. Darnell Hunt, the director of the Ralph J. Bunche Center for African American Studies at the University of California, Los Angeles, said he believed that "the burden of the proof is on the creators of the show to show they have gone beyond the bare minimum that's necessary to address the concerns that black audiences might legitimately have."[20] Gallery[] References[] ↑ 1.0 1.1 Nikki Finke's Deadline Hollywood Daily » Primetime Pilot Panic: Updated Hot List ↑ ERROR: no title given for citation Template:Dead link ↑ Template:Cite episode ↑ "Family Guy Seth MacFarlane to speak at Class Day". Photo: Joe Swanson is an outspoken cop who still flexes his macho bod (and personality) despite being a paraplegic. Like a blazing Aries, Joe never backs down from a challenge; he is always determined to rise to the top. Plus, it doesn't matter what life throws at him. Whether it's fighting off armed little people or leading the company baseball team to victory, Joe doesn't let anyone or anything stand in his way.Though heroic and a loyal friend, Joe often lets loose his unapologetic anger issues. He's got an intense and proud ego. If anyone dares to belittle him, he's quick to flip into a blind rage.Tauruses take the cake as the most stubborn zodiac sign. Similar to Lois Griffin, a Taurus is an impenetrable powerhouse. Creatures of routine, Tauruses will consistently ensure everything is in check. They value stability and security, which matches perfectly with Lois, a caring mom and a loving wife.Photo: Masters of communication, Geminis are inventive and expressive. Chris Griffin may seem inept when it comes to matters like mathematics, but his artistry makes up for his lack of book smarts. Geminis excel in creative spaces, and Chris proves his artistic ingenuity has no bounds - remember when he almost made it as a famous painter in New York?While Geminis are original and charming, they're also easily distracted - their minds are constantly wandering. They can also appear judgemental and rude, which makes sense since Chris doesn't hold back his insults.Photo: Featuring a tough exterior paired with a soft and squishy interior, the celestial crab of the zodiac tends to exude a brash personality. Cancers need to establish an emotional barrier to prevent their sensitivity and insecurities from overflowing.For example, Peter Griffin doesn't have much to offer regarding intellect, but he endeavors to compensate for his lack of brainpower by proving his masculinity. He hates being wrong in any argument with Lois and views disagreements as challenges. Whenever he's right, he feels the need to boast excessively.Photo: Neil Goldman is an outspoken nerd with an affinity for attention. Neil regularly strives to win Meg Griffin's undying love - he once tried to recruit Chris Griffin in his schemes as well. When he's not trying to win Meg's affections, he's busy geeking out over some nerd fandom. Photo: Organized and virtuous, Virgos enjoy practicality and orderliness, endeavoring to maintain perfection. While his more aggressive and ill-tempered friends, like Peter Griffin and Joe Swanson, are pros at stirring the pot and causing trouble, Cleveland Brown is polite and mild-mannered.Cleveland's Virgo-like patience and tolerance for others shines whenever he finds his house destroyed. He doesn't freak out, but accepts it for what it is. Along with their charm and wit, Virgos are helpful and concerned about others' well-being. From owning a deli to giving therapy sessions to delivering mail, Cleveland's professions demonstrate his passion for giving back to others. A huge part of Family Guy's legacy is its tendency to either cover controversial topics or be a controversial topic. However, shock value can only run so deep in the industry and likely wouldn't carry a lesser series to nearly 20 seasons. Part of what made Family Guy last as long as it has is its iconic line of eccentric characters, all of whom have connected with their audience at some level. Whether fans actually see themselves in the humble Griffin home or identify them as grand caricatures of modern society, the characters of Family Guy are some of the most memorable and strongly written in adult animation. It makes sense that a series that relies on social dynamics could cover every corner of the Zodiac. Aries: Peter Griffin Peter Griffin is the epitome of what Aries has come to represent. He's impassioned, adventurous, and very quick to act. This has contributed to his many spontaneous adventures with any variety of character, prop, or premise. He's also just very quick to anger. Whether he's getting into heated brawls with Liam Neeson or the infamous chicken, Peter has perfectly exemplified how bullheaded Aries can be. Peter is also the definitive patriarch and leader of Family Guy whose magnetic personality and brash ability to make decisions on the fly (good or bad) has led the cast on some of their most wild adventures. Befitting the Taurus and the voice that goes with him, Joe Swanson is a mild, patient character whose calm attitude perfectly juxtaposes the greater chaos around as well as the few short bursts of energy that Patrick Warburton does exemplify. In recent years, one of Joe's recurring gags is his tendency to enjoy the quieter pleasures in life, leaving him to either guide (or, much more likely, annoy) the crew with some anecdotes or typical, suburban hobbies. As a cop and friend, Joe also does a great job of holding consistency and reliability with the characters, always acting as the first person to break up a fight. While his father has plenty of explosive personality, Chris is arguably the most versatile and volatile member of the Griffins, making him a great Gemini. At one end, Chris is slow-witted and just waiting for orders. At another, he's easily excitable and ready to jump at the next activity or adventure. While he's not exactly a world-class scholar, Chris also does have his intellectual moments, particularly when it comes to pop culture. He's great at recalling and dissecting scenes from movies and is always ready to call out tropes in the series. Always ready in Family Guy's constantly shifting energies, Chris is a pure Gemini. Family Guy's quintessential Cancer sign is none other than Lois Griffin. As a mother and house wife, Lois is the motherly anchor that helps keep the Griffins relatively grounded. She cares for each member of the family (even Meg) and is often the kind voice propelling plots to keep everyone safe. This has also made her the bleeding heart of the family, making her quick to jump at every opportunity to take responsibility for some of the Quahog's hottest issues. There are few better examples of a top dog in the series than Carter Pewterschmidt. A self-possessed entrepreneur and regal socialite, Carter is a grand example of the ambition and leadership that Leos are known for but is also a strong portrayal of that kind of pack leader at their worst. It's no secret that Carter is a pompous elitist who loves cultivating an environment where he can solely benefit and rule. He's quick to make every situation all about him and is quick to anger if anyone puts in just the slightest bit of disagreement. Much like how Virgo's are the nerds of the Zodiacs, Morty Goldman is the nerd/punching bag of Family Guy. A studious and practical beast, Mort is always quick to point out the most minute details of any conversation or topic. While that can often annoy the rest of the cast, that same analytical mind has helped push some of Peter and co.'s most successful ventures. Though he's become much more of a fool in the series' recent years, Brian at his core is the voice of reason within Family Guy. Perfectly portraying that ideal Libra, his sense of diplomacy and social acceptance has always made him quick to pick out the errors of the rest of the cast as well as the greater social issues around. Brian is also a romantic whose different, failed relationships have pushed some of the series' most interesting plots. Far from the perfect character, Brian is also a strong example of a Libra's indecisive nature and often selfish lifestyle, always quick to quit things and even quicker to pay out for himself. While Peter is a strong main character within his own right, he's rivaled by the pure tour de force that is Stewie Griffin. A Scorpio at heart, Stewie has used his various interests and passions to propel all manner of adventures, whether they're quiet, social escapades to help out Brian or the grand, sci-fi epics that have made Family Guy more than just a regular sitcom. It's that same eccentricity that has also made Stewie one of the most powerful and most quotable personalities in the entire series. Despite being a majorly controversial character, Glenn Quagmire is one of the series' most well-traveled and honest characters, often acting as either the straight shooter or alternative leader of Peter's social circle. This makes him perfect as a Sagittarius as either his worldly personality or propensity to dissect other characters has helped the series remain a little more cultured and self-aware. There's no better example of this honesty and intellectualism than the iconic scenes where he picks at Brian's personality, character, and entire role in the series. Much like Joe, Cleveland is one of the most practical characters in the entire series. However, while Joe and Taurus' are reliable for carrying their groups, Cleveland and Capricorns are more known for a reserved and agreeable tendency that help keep the group moving as a whole. Though he's quick to be the straight man in a lot of scenes, Cleveland is always down for whatever wacky adventure his friends have put up and always manages to pull off his role for the week with hilarious dead pan jokes. Family Guy, now in its 20th season, is one of the oldest animated programs still running new episodes on television. Since 1999, this FOX staple has been headlining the primetime lineup, and its longevity is a testament to the ardent fanbase they have (even when critics have called the show lame or stale). So which of these Rhode Island whack jobs represents your sign? Let's find out! Aries – Joe Swanson Quick to frustration/anger and desperate to prove himself, Joe Swanson is giving off a ton of Aries vibes. He is known to hold a grudge, something common with underdeveloped fire signs. We also see some of his work as an officer, which is often fueled by impulsivity and little forethought (classic Aries). You're the type to act before you think, Aries, and sometimes that's a good thing. Other times, you should probably take a beat and make sure you really want to do that. You're known for burning bridges, even if it means you're in the wrong. Taurus – Tom Tucker You don't have to be the star of the show, Taurus. You're a consistent figure in the lives of those around you, providing that trademark earth sign stability. As a Taurus, you can have difficulty expressing yourself or expressing how much you actually care about the people around you. Generally speaking, you have a gruff exterior, and that can turn the sensitive signs off. As an earth sign, you're dedicated and determined, and if you allow yourself vulnerability, Taurus, there's truly nothing you can't conquer. Gemini – Peter Griffin Here's the bottom line, Gemini: you are notorious for having your head in the clouds and not caring how that effects other people. Much like Peter, you have a tendency to get caught up in trouble, and you aren't always the most reliable. You have a free spirit and a deep love for your independence, but it's important that you recognize how your actions might effect others. You can have a very 'me first' mentality, Gemini, but empathy and understanding are two of your greatest gifts. Cancer – Cleveland Brown Cleveland is a loyal guy, that's really what's giving me Cancer energy. He's a typical water sign, with a large emotional spectrum, even when he tries to conceal his feelings from the people around him. Often, we find Cleveland being the forgiving and kind member of Peter's foursome. He even ends up forgiving Quagmire for having an affair with his wife, Loretta; and if that's not Cancer energy, I really don't know what is. Leo – Brian Griffin Leo, you're going to hate me for this one. Brian is repeatedly shown as self-revolving, and he thinks highly of himself, even when others don't. We also see Brian as an insecure and struggling alcoholic, unable to face the things he hates about himself. That's Leo right there. You're not known for being very introspective, and that can be difficult in relationships, but you tend to find comfort in the spotlight. Even with the self-importance, you're a star, Leo. Virgo – Lois Griffin Seeing as Virgo is the 'mom friend' of the zodiac, Lois fits this bill perfectly. She's a hard worker, who does everything she can for the people she loves, and she's proven to be the most responsible member of the Griffin family. You rarely have time to yourself, Virgo, but when you do, you let completely loose. You're the type that talks about how crazy you used to be (even though you still get a little crazy). Keep bossing everything around you, Virgo; we would be lost without your leadership. Libra – Meg Griffin Much like Meg, Libra, you just don't have time for the idiocy and drama that surrounds you. As an air sign, you're predisposed to being an intellectual. As the great balancing act of the zodiac sign, you are able to withstand the chaos around you, somehow pulling it all together. So often, Libra, you're the glue that binds others' relationships. You help us find common ground with even the fiercest of enemies; even if that means at your expense. Scorpio – Loretta Brown Loretta is passionate, impulsive, and mysterious; just like you, Scorpio. You have a tendency towards revenge, holding grudges longer than almost anyone else in the zodiac. Water under the bridge doesn't exist for you. You want excitement in life, and can't stand when things get monotonous. You're notorious for switching up your style, attitude, or situation to be more exciting. Just be careful that you don't burn down the bridges you need, Scorpio; you could be stuck without a way back. Sagittarius – Glenn Quagmire Quagmire is a classic Sag. Flighty, passionate, and charismatic, Glenn is a great example of a Sag who knows their strengths. We see him as a womanizer, with no shortage of female companions; that screams Sag to me. You're naturally charming and sociable, truly the ultimate party weapon or wing-man. You're often the funniest person in the room, since you have a natural affinity for attention. Just make sure your attention-seeking behaviors don't end you up in hot water, Sag. Capricorn – Carter Pewterschmidt Carter is materialistic, and that's the first sign of a Capricorn (besides their workaholic tendencies). He puts a ton of value in his money, estate, and rich lifestyle. On top of this, he's got a rough exterior; typical earth sign. He can very rarely express himself or his feelings, which is common for Capricorns. You're a boss, Cap, and we all know it; so you don't have to flex on us all the time to remind us you're awesome. We know you're cool. Aquarius – Stewie Griffin Aquarius is often heralded as one of the intellectuals of the zodiac, so it makes sense that Stewie (a genius baby) fit this bill. He's a colorful character, who has no reservations about his own sexuality or expression, regardless of the precedent. Classic Aquarius. You're comfortable splitting from the crowd, Aquarius, and you eat confrontation for breakfast. When you put your whole mind into something, the rest of us just try to keep up and stay out of your way. Pisces – Chris Griffin Oh, Pisces. Chris is a sweetheart at his core, who is easily scared and intimidated. You're known for being the empath of the zodiac sign, with a relentlessly positive attitude at times; which is exactly what we get from Chris. While some may see you as an easy target for manipulation or mind games, your genuine positivity often turns them off of taking advantage of you. Keep that heart guarded, Pisces, because you're too good for the rest of these players in the zodiac.
